

The purpose of the TCPA was to reduce the number of tele-marketing calls that people receive at home or business. To receive a fax does not interrupt one's dinner or in any way disrupt the tranquility of their home.

To require a business to have permission from a recipient in order to receive a fax is not only a waste of time but also paper and additional congestion of circuits in the telephone system.

Once again the bureaucracy of Washington has taken a well meant act and interpreted it in such a manner to cause inconvenience and cost to businesses. It is time to have someone with common sense review rulings before they are enacted so the business people of this country have to take their time to file comments.
